Following My Own Footsteps Mary Downing Hahn

Gordy's abusive father is in jail and, as far as Gordy is concerned, that's where he belongs. Now Gordy, his mother, and his brothers and sister are going to live with Grandma, whom they've never met--and who doesn't seem too happy to have them once they all arrive.

Grandma lives in a big old house and sees her daughter's family as one to be straightened out--especially Gordy. A rude, tough bully, Gordy doesn't even try to get along, until he meets William, the boy next door. When Gordy pushes his one new friend too far, he begins to see how much he has to change--and how much he wants to. Then Gordy's father shows up and threatens to take away Gordy's new life. But, Gordy determined not to give it up, even if he must fight for it all alone.
