What kind of charade had she agreed to? Margaret Cole's new boss, William Tanner, had presented a simple offer: pose as his bride-to-be. The tycoon could collect his inheritance; she could protect her family. But what if Margaret acknowledged the feelings she had for her pretend groom?

William would use whatever means necessary—including blackmail—to please his family. Margaret was exactly what he needed to complete his plan—single, sexy—and at his mercy. He just had to keep things completely professional. Which was proving to be anything but simple.
