Abel Chapman (1851–1929) was an English, Sunderland-born hunter-naturalist. He travelled the world as a young man, shooting big game and wild birds for pleasure. Trophies from his hunting trips adorned the walls of his home at Silksworth Hall in the late 19th century. Today his stuffed animals can be seen on display at Sunderland Museum, the National History Museum in London and the Great North Museum in Newcastle. He co-authored a hunting book with Selous, called The Big Game of Africa and Europe. This book covers a Safari in East Africa in the early 1900s.
