Not illustrated. 1834 Excerpt: ...and led him to the glass to see what an elegant looking object he would be to stand before the President of the United States. Jack could not help laughing himself, but said the looks would make no difference; all President Jackson wanted was a good man, and one who had been firm in support of him. I went to work, but with no very good will I assure you; and though Jack fretted and coaxed, I had no disposition to hurry, and once when he went out to get the toes of his shoes mended, I ventured to pick out all-I had done. It was of no use, for he was so eagerly determined to go, that if I had not finished his coat, he would certainly have started without it, for he said he could swop his watch on the road any time for a new coat, or any one would be willing to trust him for one till he procured his salary, when he told his name. He says the President must be aware of his integrity and high-minded patriotism, and will undoubtedly reserve one of the salaries for him, as a compensation for his arduous public services. The public papers, he says, will give him a lift in his pretensions, and there is no doubt but that he shall be successful. One thing is certain, the same town will never hold Jack and me. He is always coming to me. for advice when he gets what he calls the ' agitations,' and I have talked myself almost into a consumption to infuse a little common sense into him; but all to no purpose, he will ask advice and then do as he is a mind to. Your loving cousin, SARAH DOWNING. LETTER XXXIII. In which Mr. Downing tells about the talk he had with the Boston Editors on his way to Washington. City of New York, May 4,1831. Dear Uncle Joshua,--I have got so fur at last, and a pretty hard run I've had of it to get here, I can tell ye. This running after offices ...
