A compilation of the Christian beliefs, presenting for the first time in a condensed form, with convenient charts and tables, the variations in structure and dogma of the principal denomination. This book is so well planned that its compactness conceals its amazing scope. Thirteen leading Christian denominations are considered in the following aspects: geographical distribution, number of adherents, the history of each faith and its branches, the officers and governing bodies of each, with the manner of their creation, their duties and powers, the customs, the practices, and the beliefs of each. The variations of dogma are most effectively set forth in a chart of the position of the several denominations on twenty-three of the most important doctrinal questions.
